Classification

Classification of Chrysanthemums are as follows: The Large Varieties are those which, by a system of dis-budding and confining the growth to one stem and allowing one flower to a plant, produce a very large flower. The Pom Pons are allowed to produce many branches and the flowers are smaller, sometimes covering the whole plant. The Pom Pons are sub-divided into the following classes: Cap, Single, Button, and Anemone. The Pom Pons are of close, compact growth, about 1 inch to 1½ inches in diameter. The Cap varieties are slightly larger, loose-formed flowers and long, pointed petals. Singles are daisy-like flowers with three or more rows of petals and the center of the flower showing like a daisy. Buttons are the smallest of the Chrysanthemums; the flowers are ¼ of an inch to ½ an inch in size. The Anemone type of flower are those that have three to four rows of petals that stand out horizontally, forming a collar to the center of the flower, which is formed of many tiny disc-florets in a cushion-like center.

Brief directions for the culture of Chrysanthemums: As soon as the weather permits in the Spring, the plants should be set out in rows about one foot between the plants. The rows should be 2 or 3 feet apart. The large varieties need not be pinched back when set out, but allowed to grow until the first bud appears; this bud is known as the break-bud; it will not produce a flower. Soon after the break-bud shows, a branching of the plant will be noticed. The second branch below the break-bud should be allowed to remain and all others pinched out; as the plants continue to grow other side branches will appear. Keep these pinched out, confining the growth to one central stem. The second bud to appear is called the first crown-bud. It usually comes too early in the season to produce a good bloom, so it is pinched out and again the second branch below this bud is allowed to grow and all other side shoots are pinched out. The next bud to show is called the second crown bud and this bud will produce the large blooms that are sought after by all who grow large varieties of Chrysanthemums.

The Pom Pons are not disbudded as are the large varieties, but are allowed to branch at will so as to produce a large number of flowers, as number rather than size is the object in view. In the case of some Pom Pons that do not send out many branches, the tips are pinched out, thus causing the plant to branch more and produce more flowers. With the Anemone's dis-budding will, in some cases, produce very beautiful specimens, especially with the Japanese varieties, but ordinarily they are treated the same as the other Pom Pons. With the Cap and Button varieties, dis-budding is not practised, as not much is accomplished by so doing. They are allowed to grow and branch as they will.

As Chrysanthemums are shallow-rooted plants, the soil should be kept moist and loose, being careful when cultivating not to disturb the roots too much. Keep the plants growing at all times; if they are allowed to dry out it will cause the stem to become woody and hard and they will not produce a good flower.

In ordinary good garden soil, fertilizer can be given the plants when they begin to show color in the bud; too much fertilizer will cause, in some varieties a splitting of the stem just below the bud. Do not allow insects to get numerous on the plants as they greatly reduce their vitality. More detailed information will be given to customers upon application concerning the culture of any particular variety of Chrysanthemum, or the control of insect or disease pests.

GUARANTEE

If any nursery stock proves untrue to the description under which it is sold, I hold myself in readiness, on proper proof, to replace all such stock, but will not be liable for any sum greater than the amount originally received. All goods are to be accepted under these terms.

These plants are sand-rooted from cuttings, which always give best results. I do not substitute; if varieties ordered are not in stock, customers will be notified so that they may choose some other variety.

I endeavor to have all plants ready for shipment by April 15th, but as all plants are propagated outdoors, weather conditions may make the date of shipment a little later.
